There have been a few mentions over the years :-)

I had taken down the link a bit earlier (it's now back again) as it seemed to be giving some rather strange behavior. When I went to the page that the link brought up and then clicked on what I supposed to be the description, it linked back here, to this post. Apparently it is my system, so my apologies to anyone else and especially if you happen to be running Vista ...

This is a great treasure though, this Tozer Library, have it as well and yet I wonder if this one here hasn't a few more titles than my edition.

Just for the sake of comparison, recently received an email regarding another effort from Logos that is still 'under development' but can be ordered ahead, a pre-publication type thing;

<http://www.logos.com/products/prepub/details/3651>

Note however the cost ...

This is the website where I've purchased mine, and it takes you to that page. I received tozer about a week ago.

<http://rejoicesoftware.com/tozer.htm>

The "your cart" (or dxcart.com) page is an independent web site and it links with the "rejoicesoftware" site OK when you start at "rejoice".

I don't understand why it comes back here if we start here...

But <http://rejoicesoftware.com> is a legitimate site and I received my purchase OK from them.
