I was watching John Piper "The Doctrine of Election" video on youtube and he read a C.S. Lewis quote about "the ancient man approaching God as the accused person approaches a judge, but for the modern man the roles are reversed, he's the judge and God is in the dock." Does anyone know what book that is from?

Thanks

I have not read it so I am not positive, but I do know that he wrote a book called, "God in the Dock."

According to Wikipedia, Lewis published a collection of essays "GOD in the Dock" which described how we try to justify and rationalize and excuse our human failures and shortcomings by placing the blame on GOD. JOB 4:17-19

Not to add to the unsurety,
much can be gleaned from all of CSL's books.
I even read his secular lit, such as "Lillith"
