The Assemblies of God recorded its second-highest ever number of new church openings in the United States, planting just more than one church a day, with 368 new churches opening in 2011.

AG Statistician Sherri Doty states that the number of new churches planted comes second only to the 400 churches planted in 1982 and ties the number of churches planted in 1991. Currently, the Assemblies of God now has 12,595 churches in the United States—the highest on record.

I'm not much for denominations, but, this definitely sounds like great news. I was involved with the Assemblies of God for a few years early in my Christian walk. They definitely have a big world missions push in their denomination.

Sadly most church movements are dying slowly but it is wonderful to see some movements like the AoG still putting an emphasis on reaching the lost and planting new local churches.

May we continue to pray for the revival of many denominations that they may again be useful in the Lord's hand as a whole.
