

Scriptures and Doctrine :: Practical and Spiritual*Practical and Spiritual - posted by Mattie, on: 2007/1/28 18:16

There are many different types of churches in America. There are the churches that are entirely spiritual - in the sense that it's all about the charisma, the gifts, the spiritual realm, etc. Then there's the other churches that focus on principles and practical issues of life - family, finances, relationships, etc.

Where can there be a right balance between these in a church setting? Some say we need to focus on the attributes of God and stop teaching about the human person. Others say we need to focus on the human to know the sinful nature vs the new nature, etc.

I hope I'm making sense. Any thoughts would be wonderful on this matter...

general comments - posted by dohzman (), on: 2007/1/28 21:49

There are two polar opposite extremes in churches and I believe every flavor in between. I often hear people say to walk in the "spirit", but it must be determined what is spirit? I understand that God is spirit, and that His Word is spirit (God breathed), I guess when I see people doing His word I have come to understand that they are walking In the Spirit and when I see people used in the extraordinary giftings of the Holy Spirit, I see that as a "now" expression of God interjecting Himself into ..... the specifics in life, almost as if to get the attention of thoughts present, or to move to the meeting of needs/deliverances/helps/mercy/etc.... Both are to be done in obedience through faith.

As to the focus? I believe the more we see Jesus and His glory, the more we are changed and understand not only ourselves but mankind in general. Let all things (teaching-preaching-works-programs-churches-etc...) be done to bring glory to God.

Re: Practical and Spiritual - posted by InTheLight (), on: 2007/1/28 22:48

What a great question, I wish I had a great answer. What I do think is that right balance depends very much on the framework of vision that a church has. For example, when Israel was in bondage in Egypt all they could think about was getting out, that's one framework. Then when they were out all they could think about was getting into the promised land, another framework, and so on. But all the while God had a larger intention that the people missed for the most part, men like Joshua were the exception. We need men like Joshua who lived beyond their day.

In Christ,

Ron

Re: - posted by philologos (), on: 2007/1/29 4:03

I think the answer may lie in the area of deciding on the 'purpose' of 'church'. There are at least three basic answers to this and all the spectrum between them.

Can I suggest you draw an equilateral triangle. At the top angle put the word 'God', at the bottom left angle put the word 'Saints' and at the bottom right angle put the word 'Seekers'. Now think about what you think the purpose of 'church' is and put a dot inside your triangle corresponding to the different emphases. If you think that the purpose is 100% to reach the 'Seeker' put your dot in the bottom right corner, etc

That will probably tell you what you are looking for. I think I know what the answer is going to be, but I will leave you to experiment first. 8-)

It is when those gathered in 'church' have very different expectations and aims that the frictions can arise.

Re: Practical and Spiritual - posted by Provost, on: 2007/1/29 12:09

This is what I think about Church. The preacher needs to constantly be turning your gaze upwards. I understand we have real problems in this world, but if the preaching is constantly man-centered the preaching is not from the Holy Spirit. The same would be for the gifts. I would say that if the "Spirit" is taking our gaze away from Jesus..it's really the "flesh".

As far as "seeker" churches..that is not Biblical. The church is to be a body of believers that are being edified by the Word of God..and then able to go out and evangelize. Also Romans 3:11 says no man seeks God...so a "seeker" church is really just a church that has decided mans ideas are better than the Holy Spirits.

Re: - posted by philologos (), on: 2007/1/29 13:18

Quote:
-----As far as "seeker" churches..that is not Biblical. The church is to be a body of believers that are being edified by the Word of God..and then able to go out and evangelize.
-----

So if you were to conduct my little experiment your choice would be 'Saints' as the main purpose of 'church'?

Re: - posted by Provost, on: 2007/1/29 14:03

Yes church is for Saints to be edified...obviously non-saints do come into church but a clear message on Jesus Christ is what they need to hear as well as what Saints need to hear.

2Peter12Therefore I intend always to remind you of these qualities, though you know them and are established in the truth that you have.

Which if you read 2 Peter you see Peter is talking about not only what non-saints need but what saints need to hear...so yeah good stuff

Re: - posted by ginnyrose (), on: 2007/1/29 18:42

Interesting the word 'saints' is introduced here....Have you ever considered nowhere in the NT is any book written to the 'sinners at...'? So now why do the children of God call themselves sinners when Romans 1:7 says we are called to be saints? "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ."

Do you consider yourself to be a saint? ;-)

ginnyrose

Re: - posted by philologos (), on: 2007/1/29 18:53

Quote:
-----Do you consider yourself to be a saint?
-----

What is much more important is whether or not God considers me to be a saint. ;-)

Re: - posted by philologos (), on: 2007/1/29 18:56

Quote:
-----Yes church is for Saints to be edified...obviously non-saints do come into church but a clear message on Jesus Christ is what they need to hear as well as what Saints need to hear.
-----

So 'saints' with a side dressing for 'seekers'? What about God?

Re: - posted by dohzman (), on: 2007/1/29 20:12

Quote:
----- What about God?
-----

That little statement brings so much sorrow to my heart it's unbelievable! :( I can hear the answer, we meet for the glory of God and to enjoy Him (forever) here and now. (Westminster Shorter Cath.)

Re: - posted by philologos (), on: 2007/1/30 3:46

Quote:
-----That little statement brings so much sorrow to my heart it's unbelievable!
-----

That wasn't intended as any kind of rebuke. Perhaps it is because I am so word-orientated that I think the way I do but I always think of the 'church' (not the meeting) as the God's house. If I was talking about 'Ron's house' and said "what would you think was its main purpose?" I think you would say "it's where Ron lives and feels at home". I will share my home with my 'family' (saints) and am very happy to invite 'others' (seekers) into my home but what is the main purpose of 'Ron's house'?

and, consequently, what is the main purpose of 'God's house'?

Re: - posted by Provost, on: 2007/1/30 10:47

The way I would view God is that if His truths are not being taught and if He is not being worshipped in Spirit...the saints will not be edified.

Re: - posted by dohzman (), on: 2007/1/30 19:51

Quote:
----- That wasn't intended as any kind of rebuke
-----

I didn't receive your comment as a rebuke. I guess for just a moment I saw what Jesus saw in the church of Laodicea and I was struck with such great sorrow over the churches I've seen who have left God out and don't have any notion of letting Him back in, that's all. Besides---Faithful are the wounds of a friend, God Bless Bro. Daryl