

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.*A sin too big to ignore. - posted by tjservant (), on: 2007/1/30 23:18

Is it okay to ignore certain sins? How about in our ministers, pastors, and teachers?

I ask this because it seems like we are quick to lynch for pornography, but gluttony is safe. Is gluttony a sin? Is it okay to be under the teaching and preaching of a glutton?

Proverbs 23:2 (KJV)

And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite.

Proverbs 23:20-21 warns us, "Do not join those who drink too much wine or gorge themselves on meat, for drunkards and gluttons become poor, and drowsiness clothes them in rags." Proverbs 28:7 declares, "He who keeps the law is a discerning son, but a companion of gluttons disgraces his father."

We sure do preach the don't drink and smoke sermons, but it seems to me that gluttony is getting a pass; especially in America.

I read that obesity now leads to more health problems in America than smoking and drinking combined.

Should we preach and teach on this subject, or just let God have this one?

Any thoughts on the subject?

God bless

TJ

Re: A sin too big to ignore. - posted by Yeshuasboy (), on: 2007/1/31 0:19

I think it's important to honour your body.

It's also important to have your body under subjection to the Spirit through discipline and mortification. This is a touchy subject friend.

We live in a society where many drive everywhere and only walk when they really have to. I know many, many people that hate to go for walks. I say, "Hey, let's go for a walk." They look at me like I got three heads, unless they have a dog and the pooch needs some exercise.

The nutrition levels in our foods that we eat here in North America are pathetic and full of empty calories. To eat healthy you basically have to take home a pretty good income. Organically grown foods cost quite a bit.

But really, it's about making healthy choices isn't it... and then sticking to them.

The body is an amazing vessel. Once it starts controlling you, look out!

Everyday is a fresh opportunity given by God. All we can do is our part.

richie

Re: A sin too big to ignore. - posted by enid, on: 2007/1/31 5:55

Gluttony is a sin, but you can't preach against a sin you are guilty of.

Contrary to popular belief, it is not expensive to eat healthy, it's not necessary to eat organic.

It's not expensive, because when you ditch the junk food, and start to eat real food, you are just swapping where you spend the money.

Besides, real food, because of its nutrition, fills up better, without the excess fat, and make you feel physically better.

I read about a pastor who had colon cancer, who refused the medical route and went the nutritional route.

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.

30 years later he is still alive and helping others to maintain a healthy lifestyle.

Basically, I've read that 63% of Americans are obese. Not so far behind here in England.

I guess the affluence in America is affecting the church. Hence the apathy. Too well fed to be concerned about anyone else.

You don't see a lot of fat Muslims do you? There are some, but compare that to western Christian and there is no contest.

Still, we have to ask ourselves, will God send someone to hell for being a glutton? Surely not.

Well, what it says in the word, it says.

God bless.

Re: A sin too big to ignore., on: 2007/1/31 7:10

TJ,

As Enid said, gluttony is a sin, but I cannot comment on what God will use as a measuring stick to determine how many pounds is too much, but I am experiencing something that may shed some 'fat' on the issue.

I attend morning church here in South Korea. My pastor is...fat. He has a round face and an even rounder stomach. Is he going to hell? I doubt it, however, I do feel that it affects his ministry.

Fat people know when they are fat and they also know of ways to mask or hide things that would reveal more of their 'fatness'. This pastor speaks holding a microphone and almost each sentence he speaks, his arm moves, which forces him to adjust his suit jacket, so that it is perfectly aligned, so to not reveal his body more than it already is.

Whether he knowingly does this or it is his subconscious doing it, it does distract him and at least me. Also, when he breathes in through the mic, you can hear a 'fat man's' breath. A couple months ago, our church did a fast together. He fasted for 21 days, on a juice diet, and talked about it almost each and everyday. In my mind, I was thinking, "couldn't you have done the whole 40?!"

This is not to belittle fat people. Some people have problems and issues, which leads them to gain weight, or eat to gain weight. I used to drink, smoke, and do drugs, so I understand crutches. My concern is what TJ brought up... fat pastors and preachers.

I am in Korea, where I have never eaten so healthy in my entire life. I also agree with Enid, in that healthy food is not expensive at all. Everyday, I eat rice and some sort of side dish (spiced garlic (I'm in love and it's so cheap...but I do smell pretty bad), spiced dried fish, kimchi (spiced cabbage), and many others), and maybe a sweet or regular potato, or eggs. We eat a lot of greens like lettuce. Hmmhmm...there are so many good foods, and that does not even include the meat.

So, healthy food is not expensive, except for meat, but that is not necessary everyday, or even more than a couple times a week. We usually finish our meal with fruit. I have never eaten so much fruit in my life (apples, tangerines, pears, grapes, bananas, persimmons, and kiwi).

When I lived in Canada, my problem was not that I could not eat the same food, it was that I was too lazy to buy it or make my own. I have learned how easy and actually fun it is to have a sit down meal, with family and friends, rather than a burger or pizza.

Korean people are generally healthy and they are quick to belittle one another on such issues as obesity (they are very hard on others), so I do not know why my pastor is any different. Yesterday, he was obviously suffering from a cold and then he mentioned a sore throat.

He is a good man, but he is fat. I find it very difficult to look at him as a pastor who is supposed to be teaching me how to live a good life. I know I am to learn my lessons from the word, prayer and with a fellowship with Jesus, but pastors should ould represent the church the best way possible.

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.

It is hard to take a man seriously who talks about fasting, when it looks as though he has never missed a meal in his life. There is a thread on here about proper attire in the church. Pastors, especially, have the responsibility to set an example for the rest of the people.

This pastor has four children, the youngest, a boy, is as fat as him. Why? Because dad is.

Anyway, I love everyone, I would just like to see people loving themselves a little more. I love to exercise, but I also know if I do not, I will be affected in a way which will effect all other areas of my life. If you don't use it, you will lose it.

God Bless and be healthy...
BrianMira

Re: to enid - posted by tjservant (), on: 2007/1/31 7:45

Quote:

enid wrote:
Gluttony is a sin, but you can't preach against a sin you are guilty of.

Are you saying that a preacher could be living in sin (adultery), and be okay to preach on commandments he is not violating?

Quote:

Still, we have to ask ourselves, will God send someone to hell for being a glutton? Surely not.

Well, what it says in the word, it says.

God bless.

Are you saying God will not cast sinners into hell?

God bless

TJ

Re: - posted by Vader, on: 2007/1/31 8:03

I have an uncle that told me, 'things are not always what they appear to be on the outside.' Sin is sin, whether it is overdrinking or over eating. I had the opportunity when I was younger to serve in Argentina. The culture is very diverse in that there were Germans, Italians, and English cultures represented. In each church they served beer, wine and tea. Each church culture taught against the evils of beer, wine and tea, respectively. It was very interesting to view it from the outside looking in. I believe in all situations, common sense used here, everything not done in faith is sin as well as moderation, Romans 14

In essentials there is unity in non-essentials there is liberty.

As I have matured in the Lord things are not quite as serious and I am on a diet. We used to sing a song, from glory to glory He changes me and the Living Word gives fresh revelation as we seek after Him. :-D

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.

Re: - posted by enid, on: 2007/1/31 9:21

Frankly tj, I don't think you understood anything I said.

I'm asking, how can a pastor preach against gluttony when he is a glutton, and everyone knows it. Unless he intends to change and challenge the people to do so.

And from what I have read in scripture, it states gluttony as a sin, which it is.

You will go to hell for gluttony. If not, then it's the only sin spoken of in the Bible where you won't go to hell.

Another thing is, this mentality of gluttons being fat. I know thin gluttons.

Someone might be fat and still be able to fast.

On the other hand, someone might be thin, and have their stomach for a master, and can't fast for one day.

I looked up the word glutton in the dictionary and it said ' an excessively, greedy eater', it said nothing about size.

God bless.

Re: enid - posted by tjservant (), on: 2007/1/31 9:47

Quote:

enid wrote:

Frankly tj, I don't think you understood anything I said.

And I am very Glad. That is why I asked the questions I did. I was just replying to what you posted. And you are right about the fact that a glutton is not always fat. That's why I didn't say it.

God bless

TJ

Re:, on: 2007/1/31 10:25

There are some good comments on here, some that I need to pray about.

Two questions here would be if anyone here is completely sanctified and lives in sinless perfection? Is all gluttony a willful sin or can people be gluttons and not yet realize how wrong it is because of the American culture we were raised in?

Very challenging and I appreciate the tone is one of encouragement and truth rather than puffing up and spiritual pride with this thread. A rare jewel among the internet message forums these days.

Thanks for the wisdom guys, especially that a glutton isn't always "fat", and someone who is "fat" isn't always a practicing glutton.

In Christ - Jim

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.

Re:, on: 2007/1/31 10:27

Quote:

-----You will go to hell for gluttony. If not, then it's the only sin spoken of in the Bible where you won't go to hell

People who profess Christ will go to hell for deliberate/willful sin, (HEB 10, 1 John 3) please see my last post.

Thanks again!

Re: - posted by DIETOSELF (), on: 2007/1/31 12:37

Would a individual who is a active body builder be a glutton for the amount of protien he or she has to take in every day t o maintain muscle mass? I understand a body builder is more inlikely living in sin if they are doing it for show but what o f the person who considers it healthy?

Brother Craig

Re: A sin too big to ignore. - posted by enid, on: 2007/1/31 12:50

I forgot to mention, I like the title of this one.

A sin too BIG to ignore!

God bless.

Re: A sin too big to ignore..., on: 2007/1/31 17:35

Frankly enid...

I believe you did not only miss what TJ said, but what I said also. TJ, originally, asked about whether certain sins (glutto ny) can be ignored, especially in ministers, pastors, and preachers.

I responded that my PRESENT pastor IS fat. I said that I cannot comment on his final destination in life, but I do SEE th at it affects his ministry.

You half agreed with me when you asked if a pastor can preach on the topic when he is a glutton and 'everyone knows it '. But then you went on to state about the mentality of gluttons being fat.

I know this is not true and I am sure a lot of people would agree that at times we are all gluttons. I am only 5'7 and no m ore than 155lbs. I exercise and am in pretty good shape, but sometimes I over-indulge. Am I a glutton? I am not sure, but the sure true sign of a glutton is FAT. That is a fact.

My pastor is fat and I am sure it is not because he breaths 'heavier air' than I do. He gets that way, one way only; food! As I mentioned, his 11 year old son looks just like him, Fat. However, his three other children are not, because they are older and take care of themselves.

A lot of Korean wives, including my fiancée, thank God, take care of their husbands, so, we are always well fed. My fian cee or her mother cooks for me almost everyday, or at least prepares something for me to eat for another day. I told my fiancée to make sure I do not eat too much, but in reality it is my responsibility to not lift my hand to my mouth.

Come on... it is about balance. Someone mentioned the weight trainer who is able to eat loads of food. Is he a glutton? No. Although, he may have an issue with God about being too proud of himself, I do not think his eating is the problem. He balances his food intake with exercise.

When I played university football (yes, at my size!), I ate so much, along with every other football player, but I did not gai n weight, because it was balanced with 3 workouts a day. Was I a glutton then? No.

General Topics :: A sin too big to ignore.

enid, as for fasting. I know fat people can fast, but my point is that it is hard to listen to a pastor preach about it when he is fat. I do not know if he is a glutton, but I do know he is fat. Can you truly say that you feel sorry for a fat person who complains about being hungry?

The longest I fasted for was 6 days. Not long I know, but when I have students who say, "teacher, I'm hungry" and they are fat or skinny, I have little sympathy for them, especially, after I ask when they had their last meal. They are complaining about hours, not days, without food. Remember Africa?!

Anyway, I just wanted to point out what I meant, so that you do not misunderstand. What is seen each and every morning is the truth. He would be better if he took care of his body. We are not just souls, we have a body and it is our temple.

God Bless and Be Healthy...
BrianMira