

Revivals And Church History :: The parson who was converted by his own sermon

The parson who was converted by his own sermon - posted by Tears_of_joy, on: 2007/5/10 20:48

[Image: http://www.williamhaslam.org/images/theparsonisconverted.jpg]

The Rev William Haslam was an English country parson whose story is told in two autobiographical volumes - 'From Death into Life' and 'Yet not I'.

One Sunday in 1851 following a period of deep conviction of sin, Haslam ascended into the pulpit of Baldhu church near Truro with the intention of telling his congregation that he would not preach again to them until he was saved and to ask them to pray for his conversion.

However, when he began to preach on the text 'What think ye of Christ' he saw himself as a Pharisee who did not recognise that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God. At that moment, the Holy Spirit breathed new life into him and the effect was so obvious and marked that a local preacher who was present stood up and shouted 'the Parson is converted' and the people rejoiced 'in Cornish style'.

Others were also converted on that day, including members of his own household, others fled from the church in fear. A revival followed that blessed Sunday that lasted for three years during which time souls were saved weekly, often daily.

(http://www.williamhaslam.org/) source

Re: The parson who was converted by his own sermon - posted by crsschk (), on: 2007/5/10 21:27

Quote:
-----others fled from the church in fear

Re: - posted by sermonindex (), on: 2007/5/10 22:06

Quote:
-----Others were also converted on that day, including members of his own household, others fled from the church in fear. A revival followed that blessed Sunday that lasted for three years during which time souls were saved weekly, often daily.

Praise God.