Following the Canadian Supreme Court's landmark decision allowing the institution of homosexual marriage, Canadian conservatives find themselves in a brave new world. Steve Crampton, chief counsel at the American Family Association Center for Law & Policy, says the Canadian high court's opinion is exactly the kind of judicial activism U.S. liberals would love to see happen in their own country. So even though U.S. conservatives have had "a really good year at the polls," he says, now is no time for the pro-family crowd to relax its vigilance.
