Sources confirm North Korea has eased or lifted a number of restrictions for citizens since Kim Jong Un succeeded his father, Kim Jong Il.

Kim Jong Il's tenure as dictator was marked by intense persecution of Christians, including imprisonment of generations of a family for a single individual's offense and executions.

"We have not heard any reports of improvement for Christians in the country and have no reason to believe anything has changed," Morgan said. "The regime still has up to 70,000 Christians locked away in virtual concentration camps."
