If all human beings should have the right to marry (or simply be with) the one they love, as proponents of same-sex "marriage" constantly tell us, then why shouldn't adult, incestuous couples enjoy that same "right"? Hollywood director Nick Cassavetes is the latest to say, "Why not?", and I for one am not the least bit surprised.

Simply stated, with the public endorsement of same-sex relationships, the endorsement (or at least acceptance) of consensual, adult, incestuous relationships is inevitable. Consider the following:

Already in April, 2007, Time magazine featured a major article entitled, "Should Incest Be Legal?" The article noted that critics of the Supreme Court's Lawrence v. Texas ruling in 2003, which struck down Texas' anti-sodomy law, argued that the ruling would lead to attempts to legalize same-sex "marriage" and polygamy. "It turns out," Time noted, "that the critics were ...

Pedophilia will be next. Then we'll be pretty close to how Rome and Greece were during Christ's first coming. The stage is being set for the second.

I have thought the same.

After this how about rape of anyone to anyone? If all sexual perversions are legalized how safe would anyone be? Jesus tells us that unless those days be shortened no one would be saved. Matthew 24:22. It is not hard to see how humanity could self-destruct by allowing lusts to run amok.

Probably the next thing to come will be marriage to more than one person at the same time.

@ Hulsey

Re: Marriage to more than one person - this was done in Brasil about 2 -3 weeks ago - a man married 2 women that he had been living together with, so he could legalise insurances and other aspects. This was reported on the BBC news channel and has caused outrage in Brasil.

"And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind...being filled with unrighteousness...*without natural affection*"

The comparison with old Greece and Rome is an apt one. In ancient Greece, what we call pedophilia was a rite of passage for every boy and girl. Even Socrates, the great moral philosopher of the age, did not condemn the practice. He just said that it was silly for grown men to play with little boys when they should be devoting their time to philosophy.

(As an interesting aside: Paul was quoting Socrates when he said, "The flesh lusts against the flesh and the spirit against the flesh.")

It may be that the ancients will rise up and testify against our generation, because they were born into pagan darkness, whereas our society had the light of the Gospel and wilfully turned away from it.

This is one of the reasons why judgement is unavoidable.

I'm skeptical about this. I looked through my critical and exegetical commentaries looked over word studies commentaries. These are the types of commentaries that specialize in listing such information and there wasn't a hint even that Gal 5:17 is a quote of Socrates.

I did several queries on google with no results. I'm not saying you're wrong, I just may be looking in the wrong places, but if you have some type of documentation on this or can point me somewhere to look on the internet I would be interested in seeing it. :)

I'd be curious to see the source as well. I know there are several other philosophers, theologians, and Pharisees whose words the apostles "redeemed" and even Jesus partially quoted and further perfected, and I always find it interesting/rewarding to find out the background and context of these.
