You're at home, enjoying a summery Saturday afternoon with the bees and nasturtiums on the patio, when the doorbell intrudes. You're greeted by an impeccably courteous, fresh-faced police officer from the Norfolk Constabulary – 'Dedicated to this neighbourhood', according to their website – and he's come to speak to you because there's been a complaint.

Not, you understand, about the troubling number of burglaries, rising car thefts, incidences of property vandalism or mad house music accompanying balmy barbeques. No, someone has reported you for sending them two gospel tracts by email, one entitled 'Christ Can Cure – Good News for Gays'; and the other 'Jesus Christ – the Saviour we all need'. Some people might have simply deleted them both and directed all further correspondence from you to 'spam', but these people got offended. Very offended. The allegation against you is that of 'homophobic ...
