Live Stream Movie Review of 'Noah' with Ken Ham - posted by sermonindex (), on: 2014/3/28 14:07

Creation Debate is AiG's ongoing examination of how, from the book of Genesis, the Bible's authority speaks with relevance to many of the hot button news and events of our day. For Christians, Creation Debate seeks to help them become better informed believers and to embolden them to be more effective in engaging our culture with biblical truth. For non-Christians, we seek to proclaim the authority of the Bible and the gospel message with boldness.

So, from TV and movie reviews to an exploration of news of the day, we invite you to explore Creation Debate. As we provide you with thoughtful and practical Bible-based commentary, please also see the box to the left to get more connected with us; and to the right, notice how you can join the conversation.

Join Us for Tonight's Live Stream Review!

Ken Ham along with our CCO Mark Looy, local pastor and AiG staff member David Chakranarayan, and the content manager of the Ark Encounter project Tim Chaffey, will offer a biblical perspective of the Noah movie. We trust that this review will further help you make an informed decision concerning how a Christian should react to this movie about a major character and event in the Bible.

Watch the live stream tonight at 8:00 PM (ET).

Thx for the post brother Greg. I am definitely not going to watch the movie. To be honest, I am extremely saddened at the blatant misrepresentation of Noah as well as God being presented to potentially millions of people by the movie, but also not surprised as Darren Aronofsky was the director...dark and depraved as usual, and merely a reflection of the prevailing mindset of a lost and God hating world...I pray that God will somehow turn this around and open doors for people to have dialogue about the bible and God and that it would lead right to the truth of what the ark was about and how that applies to us today in regards to the salvation that has been freely made available through the blood of Jesus Christ!
