On Friday, Saturday and Sunday we had a Feast of Tabernacles type of get together. Two visiting ministers came and spoke to us and share with us beginning on Friday night. On Saturday for the whole day without going home and coming back. On Saturday we met at 10:00 AM and both of the ministers spoke and we broke for lunch and then had four workshops during the afternoon. One workshop, held two times for an hour apiece, was on the Feast of Tabernacles and its meaning and the other workshop held two times for an hour apiece during the afternoon was on sacred dance and how it can be done privately or in a worship setting. We have no planned dance in our church but it was still worth listening to and some of the ladies attended. Then we broke for a time of relaxing then ate again together at 5:30 and then the evening meeting began again at 7:00. The worship was very good and the two brothers shared again and then we broke and went home. It was kind of a long day and most of us were a bit tired but we all went home very edified and encouraged by just spending the day together in fellowship and being ministered to by the word and the Spirit. It was very worth it. Perhaps the early church did these type of things. I'm thinking probably so. And we came back for the regular Sunday service. But the edification came from the time together built around worship and the word.
